Padre Pio's Spiritual Direction

"Oh holy souls who, now free of every worry, are already beatified in heaven in that flowing stream of supreme sweetness, how I envy your happiness! For pity's sake, since you are so close to the fountain of life and since you see me dying of thirst in this vile world, mercifully grant me some of that most refreshing water..."

Beatified souls, be gracious to me and come to my assistance. Since I cannot find what my soul needs for rest at night, I too will rise up like the bride in the Song of Solomon and look for the one I love: "I will seek Him whom my soul loves" (Song of Solomon 3:2). I will always search for Him. I will search for Him everywhere, and nothing will stop me until I have found Him again at the threshold of His kingdom."

ST. TERESA OF JESUS (AVILA) – Oct. 15

Biography

Teresa de Ahumada was born in Ávila on March 28, 1515. She grew up in a very religious environment, in which she developed a remarkable sensitivity for the transcendent from a very early age. In an illiterate society, her parents precociously instilled in her a devotion to reading. She lost her mother at thirteen years of age. This blow and the crises typical of adolescence aggravated an affective problem that would pull her painfully toward her definitive conversion. Physically graced and with great social skills, she soon triumphed in “the vanity of the world.” After a fierce interior battle, she made the decision to be a religious while in Our Lady of Grace boarding school.

When her father tried to stop her entrance into the Carmel of the Incarnation, Teresa ran away, but with much sorrow. Her brothers were also leaving home, heading to the Americas in search of fortune. She was 20 years old and wanted to be free to conquer her own destiny. She lived in The Incarnation for 27 years. She made her profession in 1537 and, scarcely a year later, was overcome by a strange sickness. Its severity alarmed her family, who put her under the care of a famous healer. The treatment worsened her condition until she was given up for dead. She recounts that she was healed through the intercession of Saint Joseph, albeit with a series of complaints that would last all her life. During the course of her sickness, she came into contact with Franciscan mysticism by reading Osuna’s Third Spiritual Alphabet, of great importance in her spiritual evolution because it introduced her to the prayer of recollection. Once again in the monastery, her interior summons to solitude and prayer was impeded for years. About 200 women lived together in the monastery, in which Teresa’s extraordinary personality stood out. Her constant presence in the parlor was obligatory. She attracted visitors who would leave considerable alms. However, she did not find unpleasant this intense social life which detracted her from prayer. Increasingly unsatisfied, urged on by the calling of the Friend who claimed her completely for Himself, she began to confront her inner experiences in search of light. She had many learned confessors to whom she entrusted her soul throughout her life, ever a pilgrim of the truth. In 1554, before an image of Jesus “so wounded,” her transformation began. From this moment, she would no longer be moved by fear, but by a profound love of Him who had loved her first. The Holy Spirit burst in her soul and healed her, leaving her free of her affective problems.

Saint Teresa of Jesus died on October 4, 1582, in Alba de Tormes. She was beatified by Paul V in 1614, canonized by Gregory XV in 1622, and proclaimed doctor of the Church by Paul VI in 1970. She was the first woman upon whom that title was conferred.

Spirituality

Teresa of Jesus recognized a Presence in her life that lovingly encompassed her in her friendship’s quest. She confidently abandoned herself into the arms of Christ, and from that moment, God would take the helm of her. With her life and writings, Teresa wanted to communicate how that God was, who had gone out to encounter her and gifted himself to her without measure. She had seen for herself that He desires nothing else than to give himself to the one who wants to receive him. God invites the person to enter within, where He dwells. Such is the great beauty and dignity of the soul, created in the image and likeness of God and capable of establishing friendship with him. God gives himself completely, not because the human being has garnered merits, but because He wants to reveal himself and elicit a response of self-giving. Teresa says that God gilds faults and draws the greatest share from the good that is in each one. Prayer is the door to enter into this dynamic, which has as its only requirement a determined determination. As the fruit of this encounter in friendship, humility grows by the illumination of truths in the soul: who God is, who the person is, the little which the person can do of his own effort and how much he receives. The key to advance along this path is to accept what God offers as one who is poor and to respond to his grace with generous self-surrender. When divine love caresses a soul, the soul can no longer measure its life according to the completion of precepts and rites, but instead according to the love with which it responds to so many gifts received. For that reason, this experience sets in motion a transformation of the self at its root, in order to accommodate it to a friendship of ever-increasing depth with God and its brethren.

Foundress of nuns and friars, she journeyed over more than six thousand kilometers along 16th century Spanish roads that were in terrible condition. Teresa demonstrated her extraordinary personal qualities in negotiating obstacles of all types. Insufficient financial resources were coupled to problems obtaining licenses, the hardship of the trips, the search for and fitting out of the houses, her ill health.... Suspect because she was of Jewish convert ancestry, a woman, and a mystic, she was denounced to the Inquisition on several occasions. For Teresa, each foundation was an authentic epiphany. God was extending his reign whilst new communities were inaugurated. He did this using the social insignificance of a woman. The spirit of evil opposed this, sowing along the way so many, many setbacks. But the power of God is always stronger. His light and goodness triumphed each time..

Works

The future doctor of the Church wrote knowing that her works would be revised and approved by an ecclesiastical censor. She was aware that a woman writer would be ill perceived, even more so if she intended to teach and the Inquisition could condemn her as a heretic. Those were «times of trouble. She wrote out of obedience, and recognized herself to be uneducated, a sinner, and inept. Teresa is an eminent figure in literature principally for her prose. The entire body of her work has an autobiographical character, as well to find in it other literary genres such as didactic, spiritual treatise, or chronicle. The saint of Ávila wrote from her concrete experience, without dogmatisms or abstract theses. It is always best to read her directly. The Book of Her Life, The Way of Perfection, The Book of Her Foundations, The Interior Castle, Spiritual Testimonies, Meditations on the Song of Songs, Letters, Soliloquies, The Constitutions, Poetry, Miscellaneous Writings, Memoranda, etc., Teresa of AVILA
